a framework in/about/for building world-views in english

again - architecture analogy

if you're awake enough to consciously acknowledge that really... you don't know what's going on in your world of experience you may be good at convincing others that you've really got your shit together...
but you know better

you have an epistemological itch... and it's not been satisfactorily scratched

language games

and you're not convinced that it's impossible to make some serious progress in this arena

none of the answers you've found so far have slaked the thirst then...

gendo might be worth your time investigating infinite regress

a gendo-defining document

a community of people committed to becoming less stupid and unconscious

the itch

most people, sometime in their 20s probably, give up on any “dreams” they may have had early (like actually figuring out what the hell’s going on here anyway)... feeling that they must confine themselves to supporting a family, make a secure future, etc there is a small number of people, maybe 5%, maybe more, who just can’t give up a compulsion to explore and understand the nature of their conscious experience more deeply

? is that percentage growing

i think so

"i" is a figment of language

Bob has blessed Earth with everything it needs to develop into a healthy conscious planet

we are witnessing an emergence...

the first planetary enlightened society truly worthy of the title "civilization"

DALE

Of course we'll keep it conversational. These are just to kick start conversations. The key here is to be as short and concise as you possibly can, considering your segment will be approx 2-4 mins but left-over footage can be used for something else. It doesn't matter if it takes an hour - it just means more material and more possibilities to find some really cool segments.

There is some cross-over between some of the questions.

What is language? What role does it play from your point of view?

What is the language machine? How does it operate in everyday life?

Can you touch on unconscious assumptions - what do you mean by this term when it comes to language? What kinds of problems do unconscious assumptions impose?

Can you briefly outline the 5 stupidities? (may not go into the present film project but recording can be used for a longer version of our talk I'd like to put out there on youtube. It's mainly the philosophy of Gendo I went to capture in the present film I'm doing).

Who are brain damaged language monkeys? How can people re-program their language machines to become more effective people of Earth?

How does culture and society influence our language machine?

Please could you elaborate on the concept of "breaking the identification with the voice inside our head"?

I will have some follow-up questions with each to keep the conversation flowing naturally.

If there is anything else you want to talk about during the recording, feel free to speak beyond any questions I ask.

Really looking forward to talking with you this weekend.

in one analysis, it's simple

ALL THERE IS...

is my direct, immediate, personal experience

the stories i've inherited/created about that experience there is no more... just more stories

if "you" really GET that, the "you" that gets it will be a new "i" in the story

BUT...

if you look deeper, it's not quite so simple you see that the story is just more experience... but of a peculiar/limited type... language it allows us to comment upon our commenting upon our experience
it can get complex/confusing very quickly

but that's ok
it's a fun game at that level that's why i call us language monkeys more than 40 years studying language and its relationships with intelligence, creativity, consciousness, "spirituality", behavior, blahblah, etc.

let's talk about...

five stupidities of english that interfere with our abilities to navigate experience happily (each injects some unnecessary confusion/insanity)

breaking identification with one's language machine (the voice in your head)

consequences of accepting that we really are living in a mystery after some time observing your language machine, another "self" emerges that is not of the language machine... that observes the language machine

this new “self” can emerge full-blown almost instantly (can be Earth-shattering and take a while to regain some stability)... or gradually over weeks, months, or years it might only be recognized in retrospect that “i” am not the same “i” that began this journey but, eventually, it becomes “normal”... what you deal with every day all your old problems have evaporated... great but now you might begin to see new opportunities for change...
